Online Teaching and Assessing Student Learning

Online learning offers many advantages to both students and faculty, but that comes with disadvantages too. Students need to be taught the material, but also need guidance for submitting work electronically. Professors need to adapt to new and changing technology, and the affect it might have on how we teach the material. I use BlackBoard and Moodle, and through practice I have learned some useful tools for evaluation. The purpose of my talk is to share what I have used that works, and hear from others about what they have done as well.
